

Lloyd Library & Museum News

Among the Lloyd Library's plant based research collections are unexpected resources, seed catalogs. Published by Burpee and Cincinnati-based McCullough's Seeds dating back more than 100 years, these catalogs provide a rich source of information on popular plants of the bygone eras, some of which are still popular today, and are accompanied by colorful illustrations. View samples on display in our current exhibition, Garden to Table.

Lloyd Library in the News

Cincinnati Enquirer writer Polly Campbell in her article Gardening: then and right now shares with readers highlights from our current exhibition. Garden to Table features edible plants that grow here in Zone 6. Journey from England, France and Germany to the United States spanning 400 years and discover the beauty and many wonders of food gardening.

People Are Talking about Garden to Table

Lloyd Executive Director, Patricia Van Skaik, and Karen Kahle of the Civic Garden Center join host Mindy Rosen of the Downtown Cincinnati Podcast to discuss topics ranging from the exhibit's concept and our program series to the stories behind the books and images in the exhibit. With lots of insights from both the Lloyd and the Civic Garden Center, you won't want to miss this podcast. Listen here.
