

Lloyd Library & Museum News

The Lloyd Library brings science, art and history to life, increasingly through digital technology. Lloyd fellows created digital posters for the plant blind, and our botanical art is enjoyed by hundreds daily through social media. Thanks to collaborations with the Public Library of Cincinnati and Hamilton County and the Biodiversity Heritage Library, illustrated materials from our collection are available without cost to anyone with internet access.

Plant Blindness Posters Available for Download

In 2018, artists Anna Kell and Jonathan Frey designed Posters for the Plant Blind, based on research conducted during their Curtis Gates Lloyd Fellowship. The project will be the focus of a feature story in the upcoming issue of Lloydiana. Intended to bring awareness to the significance of plant education and identification, the posters are now available for download here for personal and educational use. We also hope to offer printed posters for sale in the Lloyd Shop.

#MycologyMonday Racks up Likes on Instagram

The Lloyd's most liked Instagram post, outside of those about Fiona the hippo, celebrates the artistry of mushrooms. With 331 likes and counting, this image comes courtesy of Carl Hoffmann's 1880s Lehrbuch der Praktischen Pflanzenkunde in Wort und Bild. The post is part of a 2019 Instagram campaign #MycologyMonday. View Hoffmann's entire work from the Lloyd Library Digital Collection here.

Soup Panelist Bryn Mooth Wins Eddy Award

Congratulations to last month's soup panelist, Bryn Mooth, for receiving an Eddy Award from the Edible Communities network of publications for her article "Farmer Doctor Patient Chef." Mooth discusses food as preventative medicine and the value of teaching kitchens. Read the article here and remember that you can pick up your own copy of Edible Ohio Valley during your next visit to the Lloyd.
