

Lloyd Library & Museum News

From the Lloyd Library's inception, the Lloyd brothers collected materials from around the world, including those authored by both men and women. Lloyd collections feature works by female botanists, naturalists, explorers, scientists and illustrators, many dating back hundreds of years. During Women's History Month, the Lloyd Library joins other libraries as it brings to light, celebrates and honors the contributions of these pioneering women.

Celebrate Women in Natural History

During March, join the Biodiversity Heritage Library, the Lloyd Library and many others in celebrating women in natural history through social media. Using the hashtag #hernaturalhistory, the Lloyd will post daily on Instagram images from our collections that highlight the role women play in the past, present, and future of natural history.

Take a Closer Look at Maria Sibylla Merian

After working with materials from the Lloyd during a digitization project, Erin Wilson of Cincinnati's public library fell in love with images by botanical illustrator and early ecologist Maria Sibylla Merian. Visitors to 2017's Off the Page exhibition at the Lloyd will remember Merian's spectacular images of plants and insects, including metamorphosis. Wilson posted a tribute to Merian in the VintageCincy blog, highlighting the unexpected humor found in these illustrations, with some nearly-hidden faces peeking out from the engravings.
