

Lloyd Library & Museum News

Since 2010, Lloyd Library has partnered with the Vesalius Trust to serve as a repository for original artwork by professional medical illustrators. Providing access to medical art for education and research, this collection represents over 50 artists dating back to the 1920s. The Trust is named for Andreas Vesalius, who revolutionized the study of human anatomy in the 16th century through his published works utilizing masterful illustrations.

Polynesian Herbal Medicine with Art Whistler

Rare Vesalius Book Donated to Lloyd

The Lloyd Library recently received a donation relating to the Vesalius Trust's namesake, a stunning copy of Icones Anatomicae previously owned by physician Leon Warshaw. The illustrations were created with the original wood blocks used by Vesalius in 1543 to illustrate his seminal De Humani Corporis Fabrica. The wood blocks were subsequently destroyed during WWII by Allied bombing of Munich. Read more here.
