

Lloyd Library & Museum News

Discoveries spring from our collections. Our Artists-in-Residence found botanical illustrations that they used to inspire ceramic art pieces. This year's Lloyd Fellow uncovered Department of Agriculture reports as part of her research on Native American plant use. And, viewers of Through the Rx Bottle exhibit encountered European field guides with some of the earliest published images of cannabis.

Contemporary Art Exhibit Opening September 6

When: Friday, September 6, 5:30-8 p.m.
Where: Lloyd Library & Museum

Don't miss the opening of the Lloyd's upcoming immersive exhibit, Leaves of Plates. This mixed media installation draws on the research of the artist team Future Retrieval's two-month residency at the Lloyd Library. In the process, they brought together disparate ideas to build a new environment through objects, imagery and design. See ceramics, cut paper and textiles come together in this unique exhibition. Light refreshments.

Digitized Book Featured in Leaves of Plates Exhibit

"Stealable" Art Poster

The poster for our upcoming exhibition is a hand silk screened, limited edition work of art-- the type of poster people want to steal. You can't buy them either. They are available exclusively to Lloyd Library Members who stop by and request a copy. Giveaways like these are one of several advantages of membership. In addition to supporting the Lloyd Library, Members have first opportunity to register for Lloyd events, and enjoy discounts on gift shop items. To become a Member, click here.
