

Lloyd Library & Museum News

This week, the featured items below underscore how the Lloyd brings science, art and history to life. Our new exhibition has an artistic focus that springs from our extensive collection of historic scientific works. The Fellowship lecture and Lloyd Medicinal Garden both use a historical perspective to share applied botany with a modern audience.

Leaves of Plates Opens September 6

When: Friday, September 6, 5:30-8 p.m.
Where: Lloyd Library & Museum

Don't miss the opening of the Lloyd's upcoming immersive exhibit, Leaves of Plates. This mixed media installation draws on the research of the artist team Future Retrieval's two-month residency at the Lloyd Library. In the process, they brought together disparate ideas to build a new environment through objects, imagery and design. See ceramics, cut paper and textiles come together in this unique exhibition. Light refreshments.

Influence of American Indian Agriculture on September 19

When: Thursday, September 19, 7-8 p.m.
Where: Lloyd Library & Museum

In the era before organized food production as we know it, American Indian wisdom of the usefulness and stewardship of the native flora provided a crucial foundation for the building of a new nation. Join Lloyd Fellow M. Kat Anderson for a lecture on these contributions to our modern foodways and why we can't think of "wild" nature as separate from people. Doors open at 6:30 p.m. Registration required.

Lloyd Medicinal Garden in Ohio Pharmacist

Did you know there is a Lloyd Medicinal Garden? The August issue of Ohio Pharmacist profiles the garden, opened in 2013 on the grounds of the Governor's Residence in Bexley, Ohio. The garden honors Lloyd Library founder John Uri Lloyd, and includes native Ohio medicinal plants chosen with input from Lloyd Library staff. The residence carriage house is also home to a period medicine cabinet with antique pharmacy products from Lloyd Brothers Pharmacists on display. This issue and a wealth of other scientific and botanical magazines are available in our Reading Room.
