Biographical History: John Uri Lloyd was a pharmacist, scientist, manufacturer and novelist. His most important contributions were in the field of pharmacy and pharmacognosy. He was in large part responsible for the development and acceptance of an American materia medica. Allied in the 1870s with the eclectic school of medicine, he was accepted by all the medical schools, due to his unquestioned scientific approach to the research of medicinal plants. John Uri Lloyd was a supporter of standardization of regulations of the pharmaceutical manufacturing field. He was a major player in the enactment of the first United States Pure Food & Drug Act. His original research and writings in the field of alkaloids earned him the title of "father of colloidal chemistry." He wrote eight scientific books and six treatises, and taught chemistry at the Eclectic Medical College and the Cincinnati College of Pharmacy. Lloyd won the Ebert Prize, the premier award for pharmaceutical research, three times, and the Remington Medal, pharmacy's highest award, in 1920.

Lloyd began work as a pharmacist with H.M. Merrell & Co., an eclectic drug manufacturer. He and his brother Nelson Ashley, gained ownership of the company under the name Lloyd Brothers Pharmacists. In the course of his manufacturing efforts, Lloyd patented many devices, including the Lloyd Extractor, a medicine bottle, medicine dropper, and over 20 others. Lloyd Brothers eventually developed 379 'Specific Medicines' and was a major supplier to physicians of all types throughout the U.S.

Lloyd was also a novelist. His first work of fiction, Etidorpha, was a semi-science fiction work incorporating philosophical concepts wedded to unorthodox theories of science. Lloyd's other major novels were based upon his experiences growing up in Northern Kentucky.

Scope and Content: The materials document the life of John Uri Lloyd through detailed family papers, including reminiscences of Lloyd spanning his childhood through work with the federal government on war taxes to trips to the Middle East and Japan. These are supported by reminiscences of his mother and other relatives, genealogical materials, and biographical sketches.

The scientific work is represented by original manuscripts of scholarly publications, research and experiment notes, patents, and publications covering the years from 1867 to 1936. Business records detail his success in the financial realm, from his early relationship with the Gordon pharmacy to the liquidation of Lloyd Bros., Inc.

The literary efforts are encompassed by a breadth of original manuscripts, often several drafts and sketches of each work, plus information on editing and publication. The correspondence, from his childhood to his death, provide insights on the man, and on the major issues in the areas of pharmacy, medicine, and politics of his day.
