

LLOYD

LIBRARY & MUSEUM

At the Lloyd, our roots (or mycorrhiza, if you will) go deep. Library co-founder Curtis Gates Lloyd is best known for his tireless study of fungi from collecting and photographing specimens to publishing multiple works on the topic. His personal research formed the foundation for the Lloyd's extensive collections on fungi dating back to the 1600s. Curtis even commissioned a series of artwork on mushrooms that accurately captured his life's passion. His contributions to the field of mycology live on not just at the Lloyd, but in the home of his dried specimens at the U.S. Department of Agriculture's National Fungus Collections in Maryland.

Negotiating the Fungus Fad: Gender and Mycological Work in the Era of Professionalization

When: Wednesday, September 22, 7-8 p.m.
Where: Virtual Lecture

Mushrooms are hot today, but did you know they also were 100 years ago? Join Curtis Gates Lloyd Fellow, Madeline DeDe-Panken as she investigates the gendered dimensions between the scholarly mycological community and those engaged in the little-remembered cultural "fungus fad," which brought mushrooms to the forefront of popular culinary practice and scientific study. Through the investigation of Curtis Cates Lloyd's correspondences, DeDe-Panken uncovers fascinating insights that inform her work and provide a unique window into this period. Registration Required.

An influential scientist, Gulielma Lister, has attracted renewed attention. Although largely self-educated, she became an international authority on fungi-like organisms. Considered the "queen of slime molds," she contributed both research and stunning illustrations (example pictured) to the 1911 and 1925 editions of A Monograph of the Mycetozoa held in the Lloyd's collections. A pioneer in many ways, Lister was among the first women Fellows of the Linnean Society and a founding member of the British Mycological Society. BBC History Magazine features a fitting tribute to Gulielma Lister here.

Mushrooms Abound in Lloyd Gift Shop

Fungi keeps growing in our gift shops! Our online Redbubble shop has fun designs on aprons, travel mugs and more!
