LIBRARY & MUSEUM

We celebrate Women's History Month by paying tribute to equity in the Eclectic medical movement and acknowledging the historical role of women naturalists. Looking to the future, we join Cincinnati Magazine in recognizing local women driving change in the arts, politics, medicine, social justice, and the environment. Plus, sign up now for our upcoming April programs.

Eclecticism and Equality

When: Wednesday, April 13, 7-8 p.m.

Where: Virtual Lecture

The medical movement known as Eclecticism, or Eclectic medicine, began in Cincinnati in the 19th century. Known for many advancements, Eclecticism is noteworthy for its ethic of inclusivity, summed up by the term "kindly medicine". Dr. Amy Welling Gregg, senior associate lecturer in the College of Pharmacy at The Ohio State University, explores how the Eclectics were ahead of their time in their approach to both medical education and patient care. ### Mary Vaux Walcott: Envisioning Nature through Art

In celebration of Women's History Month, we'd like to introduce Mary Vaux Walcott (1860-1940). Born in Philadelphia, Walcott began painting at age eight, becoming an avid naturalist with a special interest in geology and wildflowers. In 1925, the Smithsonian Institution published a collection of 400 of her paintings entitled North American Wild Flowers (illustration of Gentiana saponaria or harvestbells pictured). This five-volume set highlights native plants and is part of the Lloyd Library's collection. Browse the digital version here. To explore more women artists and naturalists, visit our Women and Nature digital exhibit.
