

LLOYD
LIBRARY & MUSEUM

We are in peak migration season as birds head north from warmer climates. This amazing journey covers thousands of miles and passes right through Cincinnati. Catch the birds as they stop to refuel at Spring Grove Cemetery, then fill up on programming, research and unique finds at the Lloyd.

Freedom Birders: Birding for Freedom and Justice

When: June 2, 7-8 p.m.
Where: Virtual Program

What's a Freedom Birder? Check out this video, then celebrate Black Birders Week with Cincinnati's own Freedom Birdhouse, created by Tykee James and Jeffrey Train, co-founders of Amplify the Future. As part of the Freedom Birders movement, the organization seeks to change the culture of bird watching in the United States by developing a racial justice curriculum and bird education project. James and Train explore the roots of their inspiration, highlighting the connection of the movement of people, observation of birds, and the recognition of land.

Used Nature Books Now at Lloyd Shop

Thanks to generous donations from a renowned naturalist, an herbalist, and a natural product researcher, you can find books from their personal collections available in the Lloyd Shop. Choose from books on natural medicine, botany, and more--many of them hard to find, including this beautiful illustrated work on hummingbirds.

Extinct Birds Remembered at On the Wing

Passenger pigeons have died out, but you can learn more about them and other extinct and vanishing birds. The Lloyd's On the Wing exhibition features taxidermy, original artwork and vintage illustrations (pictured are passenger pigeons from Jacob Henry Studer's 1895 Birds of North America). Gone but not forgotten are two other extinct birds--the Carolina parakeet and the ivory-billed woodpecker--featured in On the Wing as taxidermy specimens and in 18th-century illustrations by naturalist Mark Catesby.
