

LLOYD
LIBRARY & MUSEUM

It may be hard to tell from the thermometer, but summer is winding down. As schools start to get back in session, it's a great time to learn about new topics and old favorites at the Lloyd. Our YouTube channel, exhibition space and Reading Room all have something to offer, whether it's a quick look or a deep dive into our many resources.

The Nature of Van Gogh Now on YouTube

Catch naturalist Carol Mundy's lecture The Nature of Van Gogh--now available on the Lloyd's YouTube channel. While you're there, check out other webinars on bees, wine, and nature photography to name just a few of the topics we present in partnership with world-class experts.

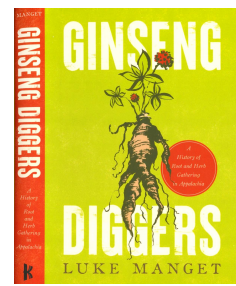

Book Artists in their Own Words

The Wild/LIFE exhibition at the Lloyd showcases works created by nearly 50 artists in the Guild of Book Workers hailing from across the United States. View the book art while listening to some of the stories behind them as told by artists from the Midwest chapter--by simply scanning a QR code in the exhibit. Explore the process, materials and inspiration in the artists' own voices.

Ginseng on the Page, Old and New

The root of the ginseng plant has a long story of medicinal and economic importance, stretching from China to the Appalachian region of the United States. The Lloyd's collections hold new acquisitions and historical items alike, such as this recently published history of ginseng (pictured) along with the very early 20th century periodical The Ginseng Journal, a trade publication for growers.

Come visit--the Lloyd will be open this Saturday, August 20
