Floral Empires: Plant Hunting and Painting in Victorian Britain

When: Thursday, December 1, 7-8 p.m.
Where: Virtual Lecture

2022 Lloyd Fellow Lindsay Wells discusses her research at the Lloyd Library in this virtual lecture combining history, horticulture and art. From orchids and azaleas to palm trees and passion flowers, thousands of new plants entered British gardens from abroad during the nineteenth century. Explore the history of British plant hunting alongside the paintings of the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood—a group of Victorian artists who filled their pictures with elaborate horticultural imagery and botanical motifs. Registration required.

A Conversation with David Lentz

Listen in on a conversation with biologist and professor David Lentz in the latest episode of the Lloyd's podcast Between the Leaves. Host Meg Hanrahan takes listeners through Lentz's research into the agricultural practices of the Maya, with insights into their civilization and how Curtis Gates Lloyd's photographs provided unique documentation for Lentz's work. Don't forget to catch his lecture on our YouTube channel, and stop in to see the historical photographs that contributed to his research in our the Lloyd's current exhibition Visions of Nature across Time and Place.
