THREE-PART VIRTUAL PROGRAM SERIES

THE THOMSONIANS

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 22, 2025
7-8 PM

Explore this 19th-century herbal medicine system that aimed to regulate body heat through a six-step healing process. Founded by itinerant healer Samuel Thomson in 1805, the movement grew rapidly, with millions of users by 1830.

When: Wednesday, October 22, 7-8 p.m.

Where: Virtual Program

Join medical historian and author John S. Haller, Jr. virtually to explore a unique movement encompassing both medical and business techniques. Founded by Samuel Thomson (1769-1843), this 19th-century system of alternative medicine was based on herbal treatments designed to regulate the body's heat through a six-step process of healing. Thomson began his practice in 1805 and, with the help of others, sold "rights" to his patented medical system to an estimated 2 million Americans by 1830. Registration required.

A Spooky History of Plants

As Halloween approaches, we've unearthed in our collection Plant Lore, Legends, and Lyrics (1884) by Richard Folkard, a fascinating Victorian-era exploration of the mythic and folkloric dimensions of the plant world. Chapters like "Plants of the Devil" and "Plants of the Witches" reveal how superstition and symbolism mixed with botany in early modern Europe.

From herbs believed to grant flight to those said to ward off evil, Folkard's work offers a glimpse into the cultural imagination surrounding plants once feared or revered for their otherworldly powers—a reminder of how deeply human history and plant lore are entwined.
